ABSTRACT

At SAS Global Forum 2007, sasCommunity.org was announced. Within just a few short months the site had over 40,000 hits on the main page and over 1,300 registered users.

This panel discussion will be led by two of the principal architects of the site, Phil Miller and Don Henderson, who will be joined by several power users of the site.

sasCommunity.org is sponsored by the SAS Global Forum Users Group and is based on wiki technology (the same software that drives Wikipedia) and is not at all like a traditional Web site. The panel will discuss how this collaborative networking facility can be leveraged to support your use of SAS software.

The topics to be addressed include:

* types of information that are available on sasCommunity.org
* tips for successfully finding information on sasCommunity.org
* how to contribute to sasCommunity.org, including a discussion of articles and categories
* future plans

Extensive audience participation is planned. Come prepared with your suggestions and questions. Regardless of whether you are an active user or you've never visited sasCommunity.org, there will be something in the panel discussion for you.

No paper was submitted for publication.
